Final Exam

Fall 2008

ESSAY: Answer two of the following in well-structured paragraphs, and use examples from the reading to help out when appropriate. Each answer should be about a page and a half or two pages (double spaced). There's no need for formal citation of sources or a list of works cited here. When referring to a source, you can give proper attribution by naming the author and title as you use the information. Here's an example: According to David Gillette's "When Media Collide,"...

[15 points each]

1. Describe how you would effectively address concepts of culture, race, and/or gender in a high school English class, arguing that your approach is a sensible one. Use your textbook and at least one journal article to support your answer.
2. Of the assigned chapters of The English Teacher's Companion this second half of the course (Chap. 12 and following), which one or two resonate the most with you? In other words, which make the most sense and appeal to you more than the others? Explain why and give specific examples from that chapter or those chapters.
3. Describe what you see as the most important rights and responsibilities of educators in Texas according to the law, and explain why those are the most important. Use sources other than the textbook to address the Texas angle here.

Deadline for submission: 12:30pm on Friday, December 12.
